1. The Trepca Mines, Zvecan, Yugoslavia, were originally American-owned. They produced silver and lead. When Yugoslavia was over-run by the Germans at the beginning of the last war, the American staff withdrew. When the Russians came they took over the mine operations and immediately set to work to mine the deposit, not only for its lead and silver but for the uranium associated with the minerals. Even old tailings and dumps were processed for their uranium content.
